

State Adoption

If the state and a child or children's birth parents cannot resolve the safety issues that created a barrier for the child to return and live at home safely, the state may recommend to the court that the parent-child relationship be terminated and the children placed with permanent families or caregivers. Adoption is a permanent lifelong commitment to a child. It is a process by which families have the opportunity to give a child a "forever home."